This dwelling house is a secondary building in an agricultural complex known as the "Dennis Farm." The property is located south of U.S. Route 40, 1/4 mile east of St. Paul's Church Road, 2-1/2 miles east of Clear Spring. The main dwelling is of brick and is described in form WA V-025.

This structure consists of two sections which appear from the exterior to have been built separately. The sections are attached on an axis forming one long structure. Situated near a spring and small stream, the Meadow Brook, the house faces east. The south section of the house contains one and a half stories, while the north part consists of two full stories. The facade of each section is four bays in length with two central doors flanked by a window at the main floor.

The exterior of the structure is of buff siding with dark green trim. The weather boarding could conceal log construction in one or both sections. The house is set on foundations which are of local fieldstone. Two brick chimneys with corbeled caps are internally placed at the south gable end of each section. The roof is covered with corrugated sheet metal.

The doors and windows are framed with plain but rather wide trim. Architrave molding is present at the lintels of all windows except those at the second floor of the one and a half story section. All windows excepting the small three over three double sashes at the second floor of the one and a half story section are double sashes with six lights per sash.

Both sections of the structure share a one-story porch with a low hipped roof. It is supported by plain square posts and covers all of the doorways at the front of the house.

It is not known when this structure was built but it is probably contemporary with the other buildings on the property which date from the mid-19th century. The south section of the dwelling reportedly has a spring in its basement and may be the older of the two parts.

The house is being preserved and is in no immediate danger of destruction.

This house is significant architecturally as a part of a complex of well preserved buildings. In addition to this structure, there is a lattice work brick-end bank barn, a spring house and a large brick dwelling house of a type frequently found in the area. All of the buildings are being maintained and preserved by the owner. They are a complete, unaltered and well cared for example of rural architecture of the mid-19th century.

The small weather board tenant house is particularly significant as an example of secondary housing of the period. The presence of so many doors suggests that it was intended to be a multi-unit dwelling which was probably constructed to house farm workers.

Secondary buildings such as this one could show influences of early building types based on antiquated traditional patterns rather than on the styles that were current when the structure was constructed. While more prominent structures such as the main dwelling house on the property tended to follow contemporary styles, secondary buildings would have been more likely to have reflected traditional patterns which were not so new or fashionable but were well known and easily constructed. Thus the house appears older than it probably is.

The farm has been in the Dennis family since 1895 when it was purchased by Tobias Dennis.
